He was America's Godfather, and he dreamed of controlling the most powerful office in the land. Mafia chieftain Sam Giancana spent millions and used muscle to help get John F. Kennedy elected President. Then the Kennedys turned against him, and so Kennedy had to be destroyed.

"Doublecross" is the exclusive inside story of the U.S. mobster Sam Giancana, told by his brother and Mob colleague Chuck, and nephew Sam. It contains a shocking account of the Mafia's involvement, together with elements of the CIA, in the deaths of Marilyn Monroe and John F. Kennedy.

Superstar Marilyn Monroe had long had connections with the Mafia, and she was the lover, first of John, then Bobby Kennedy. But by the summer of 1962 she had
How the Mafia murdered Marilyn Monroe

Marilyn Monroe was shot on August 6, 1962, at her home in Los Angeles. Her death was ruled a suicide, but many believe it was a murder by the Mafia. Monroe was a star of the 1960s and was involved in the Hollywood blacklist. She was known for her beauty and her relationships with some of the most powerful men in Hollywood.

Monroe was married to Arthur Miller at the time of her death. She was also engaged to JFK at one point, but he was never officially declared as her husband.

Monroe's death was a mystery, and many believe it was a Mafia hit. The Mafia was known for their involvement in the Hollywood blacklist and for protecting their own members. Monroe was a threat to their interests, and they may have killed her to silence her.

Monroe's death has remained a mystery, and it is debated whether she was murdered or if she committed suicide. The truth may never be known.

chemical potions for the Castro hit, had been a brilliant choice. A lethal dosage of sedatives administered orally, and by force, would have been too risky, causing suspicions during a likely struggle, as well as vomiting — a side-effect that typically resulted from ingesting large quantities necessary to guarantee death. Using a suppository would eliminate any hope of reviving Marilyn, should she be found, since the medication was quickly absorbed directly into the bloodstream. There’d be nothing in the stomach to pump out. Additionally, a suppository was as fast-acting as an injection but left no needle mark for a pathologist to discover. In short, it was the perfect weapon with which to kill Marilyn Monroe.

Indeed, within moments of insertion, the suppository’s massive combination of barbiturates and chlorophyll entered her bloodstream, rendering her totally unconscious. The men carefully removed the tape, wiped her mouth clean, and placed her across the bed. Their job completed, they left as quietly as they had come.

It was at this point that Monroe had hoped “Act Two” of the drama would begin — that next, Bobby Kennedy’s affair with the distraught, love-stricken starlet would be exposed. But what Monroe hadn’t counted on were the lengths Bobby Kennedy would go to cover up the affair. Nor could Monroe assist in the attorney general’s exposure by providing damning evidence of a compromising relationship with the starlet, due to the risk such an act posed to his own clandestine affairs with the CIA.

Nevertheless, Monroe had expected that horror of police would be called in — Monroe’s neighbours and housekeeper questioned, her home searched, and the scandalous discovery made that Bobby Kennedy had been there just hours earlier. In the wake of the investigation, it might also be suspected that the attorney general, along with a confederate, had administered a lethal dose of sedatives into Marilyn Monroe’s bloodstream. That, to Monroe, would have been the ultimate victory. But that was not to be.

Instead, the killers listened over their wiretaps in the hours following the murder as a series of phone calls alerted Bobby Kennedy to Marilyn’s death and ultimately mobilised a team of FBI agents to ensure the impending disaster that Monroe had anticipated would follow.

Occasionally, some misguided citizen declared his independence from such tyranny and in so doing wrought the death of Mooney's zealots; more than a few arms and legs were broken before the polls were closed that day.

MOONEY

At the last minute in his campaign for public office, Mooney had called on his fellow citizens to rise up against the forces of oppression and tyranny. The people had answered the call, and in so doing had witnessed the fall of Mooney's empire.

THE KENNEDYS

Mooney's old friends, the Kennedys, had always been a source of strength and comfort to him. When Mooney needed someone to turn to, the Kennedys were always there to lend a helping hand. They had always been his confidants and trusted advisors.

CHUCK AND THE KENNEDYS

Chuck and the Kennedys had always been close friends, and they had shared many adventures together. They were always there for each other, no matter what the situation.

OVERNIGHT, Mooney’s contact had been severed with Jack Kennedy while Bobby Kennedy diligently worked to destroy him. It was all too clear to Mooney that the Kennedys had no intention of honouring their promises.

Mooney had received a call from Jack Kennedy, who had been his closest friend for many years. Jack had promised to help Mooney with his campaign, but Mooney had been disappointed when Jack had not followed through.

SIONICANA

Mooney had always admired Siciana, the beautiful woman who had been his constant companion. She had always been there for him, through thick and thin.

THE LAST MESSAGE BEFORE Mooney was killed was...

Mooney had sent his last message to Chuck, saying that he was ready to die. He had been prepared to die for his beliefs, and had no regrets.

THE END

Mooney was assassinated on November 22, 1963, in Dallas, Texas. He had been a victim of the Kennedy family's brutal campaign against him, and had paid the ultimate price for his defiance.
